CFAES has the following living-learning opportunities available. Visit the University Housing website for more information: https://housing.osu.edu/learning-communities/

Environment and Natural Resources Scholars

The Environment and Natural Resources Scholars is a community-based living experience for first and second year students interested in conservation, outdoor recreation, and service. ENR Scholars live in Morrill Tower, take the Scholars seminar during their freshmen year, and engage in events and volunteer projects throughout Columbus. Other activities include backpacking trips, semester-long conservation themes, and Earth Month of Service.

Food, Agricultural and Environmental Sciences Learning Community

Students in their first or second year with majors in The College of Food, Agricultural, and Environmental Sciences, can be a part of the FAES Learning Community in Nosker House. These students may participate in workshops through the Leadership Center, engage in service projects, and attend off-campus trips.

W.K. Kellogg Foundation and Bobby Moser Food Security and Sustainability Learning Community

If you have passions for food production, security, and safety, but also nutrition, wellness, hunger, food waste, and sustainable agriculture, then the Kellogg-Moser Learning Community is the place for you! These students live in Houston House, take the FAES 2000 seminar course during their first semester of college, conduct community service, and attend off-campus trips while getting to interact with world-renowned faculty who address food security issues!

Students Understanding Sustainability and Taking Action to Improve Nature and Society Learning Community

The SUSTAINS Learning Community is a community-based living-learning environment housed in Scott House. This community focuses on sustainability, human interaction with the environment, and service. Students in SUSTAINS take a seminar course during their first semester of college and also participate in an annual professional development trip, Dinner and Dialogue series with professionals and faculty on sustainability, and complete service projects!
